Excerpt: . charged with 1,000 pounds, so that four tons of ore may be worked in twenty-four hours by one pan, requiring about two and one-half horse-power each. In regard to the amalgamation, there will be probably the same result as obtained by Wheeler s. All that was said in relation to the manipulation with Wheeler s pans can be applied also to Hepburn s. n. ROASTING PROCESS. Sec. 28. The roasting of silver ore, for the purpose of converting all the silver into a chloride, no matter in what condition it may occur, either in the metallic state, or in a sulphuret, arsenide or antimonial silver, in order to make it fit for easy decomposition and subsequent immediate amalgamation, has been adopted in several extensive works of Nevada Territory. There may be some kinds of silver ore, which under certain circumstances can be treated raw in pans very advantageously, even if there be a greater loss of silver. Nevertheless, the high importance of roasting can not be overlooked, this being in many instances the surest and the only way to beneficiate such silver combinations as refuse to deliver the silver by amalgamation without roasting. There is no silver ore which can not be treated successfully by means of roasting. The patio or pan amalgamation, working so-called rebellious ores, must resort to roasting, or else exclude such ores from the manipulation. In regard to the importance of roasting, which in course of time may be...
